WESTERLY

A rare fish, a real puzzle even to most old-time fishermen, was found by David Nugent, of Pawcatuck, in his pound off Wampanoag Point, Stonington, Wednesday afternoon. The curious prize is fifteen inches in length and was brought in Thursday to Basil Boies Wood, librarian of the Westerly Public Library for identification. It was ascertained that the fish was a remora, or sucking fish, of the family Elenelidae, interesting because of its common habits. The remora attach themselves to sharks or other large fishes by a sucking disc on the top of the head. They have an elongated body, covered with very small scales; one soft-finned dorsal fin, situated above the anal fin; the head flattened and covered with an elongated disc, extending beyond it, which exhibits numerous transverse cartilaginous laminae directed backward and has a free and flexible broad margin.

These laminae are formed by modification of the spinous process of a first dorsal fin, which when raised, are raised by the margin of the disc has been closely applied to a smooth surface, a vacuum is created; and so powerful is this attraction that great weights may be dragged by a remora, while it obstinately refuses to let go its hold. A remora thus attached to a shark or turtle may be carried about for weeks, leaving its host only to secure food, injuring the shark in no way save, perhaps, by the slight check its pressure gives to the shark's speed in swimming. The remora is occasionally caught as far north as Cape Cod.

In Madagascar native turtle catchers put a ring about the narrow canal and the remora's body, attach a line to this ring, and thus use the fish for catching turtles. Several species of the family are known, dwelling in all the warmer seas.

A rarer form, that one caught by Mr. Nugent, is Rhombichnus, which attaches itself to spearfishes. More numerous is the closely related species called shark sucker.

Simple Way To End Dandruff

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have. You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

The community was shocked Tuesday afternoon when the word came that Raymond Johnson had been drowned in the pond at the rear of the C. A. Chapman store where the boy's father is employed. He was sitting on a rock on the bank of the water, with other children, reaching about for suckers, when he lost his balance and pitched into the water, which is very deep at this place. The body did not rise and the alarm was immediately given, but the body was not located for around half an hour, when the water had been drawn off. Roy Johnson, the late father, was notified but Mrs. Johnson, who was out of town, could not be communicated with until later. The boy was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Johnson, a bright, active boy of 12 years, and deep sympathy is felt for the parents in this crushing sorrow.
